AT A GLANCE

Introduction

FROM THE CHAIR

In 2025, the Ann Arbor Transportation Commission continued to push the City’s transportation system toward safer, more people-centered outcomes—grounded in the Moving Together Towards Vision Zero framework and informed by public input, crash data, and the day-to-day realities of maintaining and operating a complex network. We’re encouraged that the direction of travel remains clear: designing streets that reduce the likelihood and severity of crashes, improve comfort for people walking, biking, rolling, and taking transit, and better balance how public space is allocated.

This year also reinforced the hard truth that progress is not linear. Serious and preventable crashes still occur, and the human impact of those events is a constant reminder of why Vision Zero matters. At the same time, implementation remains constrained by funding availability and timing, coordination needs across agencies and jurisdictions, and the practical limits of staff capacity. The Commission’s role—advising, advocating, prioritizing, and keeping safety outcomes at the center—remained essential in navigating those constraints without losing momentum.

Despite those challenges, 2025 brought several major highlights. The State Street corridor project advanced, including continued work toward the City’s first transit-only lane—an important step in making transit faster, more reliable, and more competitive, while also improving the corridor’s overall safety and function. The City also secured the federal Safe Streets for All (SS4A) grant, strengthening Ann Arbor’s ability to build and implement a more systematic pipeline of safety investments and to accelerate data-driven Vision Zero work. In addition, progress on the Miller Avenue reconstruction and bikeway marked a significant corridor-level commitment to safer, more comfortable travel for people biking and walking, alongside needed street reconstruction and multimodal upgrades.

Looking ahead to 2026, the Commission will stay focused on turning plans into on-the-ground safety improvements—moving from concept and design into delivery wherever possible. Priorities will include continued advancement (and clear performance measurement) for the State Street transit-only lane, leveraging SS4A resources into concrete actions and near-term safety projects, and maintaining momentum on the Miller Avenue reconstruction and bikeway as it moves closer to reality. We also anticipate continued Commission attention to speed management, safer crossings, filling sidewalk gaps, targeted corridor safety upgrades informed by crash patterns, and coordination with partner agencies.

None of this work happens in isolation. The Commission remains grateful to City staff, partner agencies (including transit and public safety partners), City Council, and the many residents who engage thoughtfully and persistently. We enter 2026 committed to practical, measurable progress toward Vision Zero—and to keeping safety, accessibility, and accountability at the center of Ann Arbor’s transportation decisions.
